The invention relates generally to the field of integrated circuits and more particularly to a method and system for enhancing the performance of integrated circuit devices. As components within integrated circuits have become smaller, the effects of parasitic resistances, capacitances, and other circuit elements have become more pronounced. A host of different structures and techniques have been developed to minimize these effects, but there exists a continuing need to refine the art. The invention provides a method and system for enhancing the performance of integrated circuits by compensating for internal circuit topologies. In one embodiment, the method and system enhances the performance of an integrated circuit having an internal circuit and output circuit. The method involves providing a first circuit network that will be formed on the integrated circuit. A second circuit network is also provided that will be formed on the integrated circuit. The first circuit network is formed so as to have a first resistor coupled to a first node and a second resistor coupled to the first resistor. The first junction is provided that couples the first node and a first node of the second circuit network. A second capacitor is coupled to the first node and the second resistor. A first junction is provided that couples the second node of the second circuit network and the first node of the second circuit network. A second junction is provided that couples the second node of the second circuit network and the first node of the second circuit network. The first junction is configured to disable a path between

The invention relates to a method of drying a comminuted foodstuff material by passing heated air through the material. More particularly, the invention relates to a method of drying a material containing sugar and/or starch-containing ingredients, such as sugar beet, cactus fruit, fruits, tubers, cereal products, spices, coffee, etc., which are dried at ambient temperatures in storage and which are unsuitable for conventional drying. Various materials, especially sugar, are stored in a dehydrated form in order to avoid spoilage of the material. Moreover, some sugar products, such as sugar beet, contain a considerable water content. It is known to dry sugar beet in a plant at ambient temperatures in order to obtain a product with a low moisture content which is then stored in dehydrated form. Normally, the material is dried in a drum dryer, which is connected with a circulating ventilation system and which has a coating of a water-repellent substance. One disadvantage of the known method is the considerable energy consumption in order to provide the mechanical ventilation with the circulation of air and consequently the formation of a drying and dehumidifying air current. One object of the present invention is to provide a method of drying a comminuted material with a low total water content in which the drying takes place with relatively little energy consumption. The method can be used, inter alia, for drying an unprocessed comminuted product which has a content of sugar and/or starch-containing ingredients in the range of about 4 6d1f23a050
