The effect of a polyacrylonitrile (PAN)-based material on the visible-light-induced decolorization of methyl orange (MO) in the presence of TiO(2) (PAN-NPs/TiO(2) composite material) was evaluated. The treatment was carried out in a flow-through photoreactor using a laboratory-scale fluidized bed. The obtained results showed that the PAN-NPs/TiO(2) material was able to promote the visible-light-induced decolorization of MO, with values of removal exceeding 90% after 3.3 h of treatment. Besides, the PAN-NPs/TiO(2) material was found to improve the stability of TiO(2) in such conditions, increasing the efficiency of the treatment. In addition, the reactivity order of the MO dye with PAN-NPs/TiO(2) composite material in the presence of TiO(2) and in the absence of TiO(2) was determined, indicating that the PAN-NPs/TiO(2) material was found to be more reactive in the presence of TiO(2).Q: HTML tag and Doctype I want to display the following html on a web page.
